

BRENDA KEMBALL

Did you ever have the opportunity to play a private course? Well the Southern California Golf Association has a program that allows its members to sign up for what is called the member for a day tournaments. Over the course of a year between 90 and 100 private courses open their doors to allow us wanna-be golfers the chance to play some top drawer private clubs.

Brenda a pretty good golfer in her own right is the point of the spear for the SCGA's member outings. Guess who completes the line-up for each year's roster? That's right, Brenda. Keeping in touch with so many clubs and assuring them of a good showing, being so personable that they can't resist her charms and allow us back for another year.

But consider, the program continues to grow from just a few clubs a few years ago to nearly 100 this past year. Some clubs skip a year and some new clubs get on board. Occasionally the outing serves the private clubs ulterior motive of making a buck while punching greens, over seeding or thatching, but by and large the predominance is a perfect private club outing for our edification.
